The Curfew Movement.

THE Curfew movement started Tuesday by THE NEWS at the urgent request of some of the best citizens of Paris, is receiving wide attention, and is being heartily commended by the public in general. The coupons printed in THE NEWS are being cut out and sent in to "The Curfew Editor", and it is now assured that the petition to be presented to the City Council will be a large one. Many parents are not aware of the wickedness that their boys and girls have learned and will learn by being allowed to run the streets at night. In gathering the news the newspaper man has heard of wickedness practiced by Paris children of tender years that would appall the parents if they knew.

Many ladies have expressed a willingness to circulate a petition for signatures, and there is no doubt but that the Curfew movement will be a popular one.

Persons who favor the Curfew movement are asked to cut out the following coupon, have the adult members of the family sign it, and send in to "The Curfew Editor" of THE NEWS.

TO THE HONORABLE CITY COUNCIL OF PARIS.

GENTLEMEN—We the undersigned, citizens of Paris, respectfully request your honorable body to enact and have enforced a Curfew Law, if you deem it wise and just, such as is in effect in various cities throughout the State, in the interest of the morals of the boys and girls of Paris, our future men and women.

Signed,

The Curfew ordinance recently passed by the City Council at Covington went into effect Wednesday night. The fire bells give one tap, after which the police are required to arrest all children under fifteen years found on the streets without their parents or guardians.

Mr. Creston Clarke and his company of players presented the beautiful romantic drama "The Last of His Race." Wednesday night at the Grand to a well pleased audience. Mr. Clarke's support was acceptable. The play was well staged and the costumes were handsome. The company may play a return engagement later in the season.

The next attraction at the Grand will be Lincoln J. Carter's melodrama "Just Before Dawn" which will be seen next Thursday night.

It Shall Consist of Twenty-Five and Eight-Tenths Grains of Gold, Nine Grains Fine.

The Present Legal Tender Quality of the Silver Dollar and of the Subsidiary Coin Shall Be Maintained; Also Paper Currency.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—The financial bill prepared by the republican caucus committee, which met at Atlantic city last spring, was Tuesday made public by the committee. It is in part as follows:

Be it enacted by the senate, etc., That the standard unit of value shall, as now, be the dollar, and shall consist of twenty-five and eight-tenths grains of gold, nine tenths fine, or twenty-three and twenty-two hundredths grains of pure gold, being the one-tenth part of the eagle.

All interest-bearing obligations of the United States for the payment of money now existing or hereafter to be entered into and all United States notes and treasury notes issued under the law of July 14, 1890, shall be deemed and held to be payable in the gold coin of the United States as defined in section one of this act; and all other obligations, public and private, for the payment of money shall be performed in conformity with the standard established in said section. Nothing herein contained shall be construed or held to effect the present legal tender quality of the silver dollar, or of the subsidiary of minor coins, or of the paper currency of the United States, or the laws making national banks receivable and payable for certain public debts and dues and obligations between national banks.

There shall be established in the treasury department as a part of the office of the treasurer of the United States, a division to be known and designated as the division of issue and redemption, to which shall be assigned, under such regulations as the secretary of the treasury may approve, all records and accounts relating to the issue, redemption and exchange as hereinafter provided, of the several kinds of United States money. There shall be transferred from the general fund in the treasury of the United States and taken up on the books of said division as a redemption fund, the amount of gold coin and bullion held against outstanding gold certificates, the amount of United States notes held against outstanding currency certificates, the amount of silver dollars held against outstanding silver certificates, the amount in silver dollars and silver bullion held against outstanding treasury notes issued under the Act of July 14, 1890; an amount of gold coin and bullion to constitute a reserve fund equal to 25 per cent. of the amount both of United States notes and treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, outstanding. The gold and silver coins and bullion transferred from the general fund in the treasury as herein provided shall be increased or diminished as the case may be in accordance with the provisions of this act and in no other way.

It shall be the duty of the secretary of the treasury to maintain the gold reserve fund taken up on the books of the division of issue and redemption, as herein provided, and for this purpose he may from time to time transfer to such fund any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, or may exchange any of the funds of the division of issue and redemption for other funds which may be in the general fund of the treasury, and in addition thereto he is hereby authorized to issue and sell whenever in his judgment it is necessary to the maintenance of said reserve fund, bonds of the United States bearing interest at a rate not exceeding three per cent. per annum, payable in gold coin at the end of 20 years, but redeemable in gold coin at the option of the United States after one year. But no transfer shall at any time be made from the general fund of the treasury to the division of issue and redemption which will reduce the general fund below $50,000,000. That all United States notes and treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, presented for redemption, shall be redeemed in gold coin at the will of the holder and all silver certificates presented for redemption shall be redeemed in accordance with existing law. The secretary of the treasury is authorized and required to use said reserve fund maintaining at all times the parity and equal value of every dollar issued coined by the government; also, if any time the secretary of the treasury deems it necessary in order to maintain the parity and equal value of the money of the United States he may at his discretion, exchange gold for any other money issued or used by the United States.

A BRITISH VICTORY.

A Battle on the Railway at Rooi Laagte, Near Gras Pan—Boers' Main Position Was Captured.

ORANGE RIVER, Monday, Nov. 27.—The British arms have achieved a brilliant victory. The enemy strongly entrenched held a range of hills commanding both sides of the railway at Rooi Laagte, near Gras Pan. The Lancashires, under Lewis, reconnoitered in an armored train on Friday. The Boers shelled the train, killing Lewis and a private.

Gen. Methuen then advanced. His column made a detour and bivouacked for the night at Swinks Pan, three miles from the Boer position.

At dawn the advance began, the guards forming the reserve. The column debouched on the plain eastward of the Boer Kapjes. The Boer guns opened fire. Two batteries of British artillery posted on each side shelled the Boers, practice being good on both sides.

The Boers stuck tenaciously to their positions, firing steadily and accurately. The duel which constantly became hotter, lasted three hours. The Boer shells wounded several men of the naval brigade.

Finding it impossible to displace the Boers by artillery, Gen. Methuen resolved upon an infantry attack. A brigade of infantry, including the Yorkshires, the Northampton, the Northumberland and the Lancashires, with the naval brigade on the right, gallantly stormed the Boer positions in the face of a withering fire and carried hill after hill, the brigade under Col. Money capturing the main position against a terrific fire, but suffering severely.

THE THIRD TEST.

Transferring Coal From a Collier Vessel to a Man-of-War While at Sea—It Was Perfectly Satisfactory.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—As a result of three days' trial of "coaling ship" while towing at sea, just completed by the United States battle ship Massachusetts and the collier Marcellus, it may now be possible for any war ship to receive coal by the overhead wire system at the average rate of 20 tons an hour. The vessels named returned to port Monday night and anchored off Tompkinsville, S. I., after having been away for a week, three days of which were spent at sea giving the Miller conveyor a thorough trial under varied conditions. At the conclusion of Monday's trial, the third of the series—when 126 bags of coal, each weighing 410 pounds, had been transported in 66 minutes without accident, 88 of them being delivered in 44 minutes—the trial board announced that the test was ended and that they were satisfied with the result. The trial board assigned by the navy department to witness and report on the experiments from the deck of the collier Marcellus was composed of Commander A. B. M. Lillie, in command of the Marcellus; Lieut. Commander W. D. Rose and Lieut. John B. Bernardo.

The latter ship and collier left the city last Tuesday. They made anchor in Sandy Hook bay on Wednesday night, proceeding to sea at 8 o'clock the next morning. A pair of wooden shears about 30 feet high had been erected on the after deck of the Massachusetts. At the top of these was fastened a large iron block, over the sheave of which the wire cable traveled that was to bring the bags of coal across to the war ship. At the east end of the entrance to Gerney's channel, and at about four miles from the Sandy Hook lightship a boat was lowered from the battle ship and a towing hawser quickly run to the collier. By means of a smaller line a sea anchor cable was sent over to the Massachusetts and made fast, its end having first been passed through the top of the carrier—a flat iron block having three sheaves, one above the other through which the conveying cables run. This first cable passed through sheaves at the foremast and mainmast heads of the collier, the wire then leading to the water where a cone-shaped canvas bag towing astern, keeps the line taut and helps to support the carrier and its load.

A specially contrived Lidgerwood engine, having two winding drums, is located close to and abaft the foremast on the collier. A steel 3-4 inch cable leads from one down to the foremast head, over a sheave, across the block on the war ship's shears, thence back to the collier's mast, and down to the rear drum. This engine gives a reciprocating motion to the conveying rope, paying out one part under tension.

The bags of coal are first hoisted upon the collier's deck to the masthead upon an iron cage or elevator.

The letter U inverted represents the iron bale with hooks at its end, to which the bags are suspended, on two short rods that project from the top of the elevator. The carrier is fitted with a long pointed hook pivoted at its bottom. This hook, driven under the iron bale, engages it, the elevator drops and the carrier starts at a speed of 1,200 feet a minute for the war ship. When it reaches that end of the route, a rubber buffer on the block strikes a latch, which releases the hook and the bars, with their iron bale drop down the canvas chute to the decks of the war ship, where the jacksies scupper away with it on trucks to the bunkers. Three hundred feet is the distance maintained between ships during the operation. The test was a success from the start.

AN EXCITING TRIP.

The Transport Manauense Arrives at Manila Thirty-Three Days From San Francisco.

VESSEL SPRUNG A LEAK IN MID OCEAN.

Since November 17, Night and Day, 400 Hungry, Exhausted Soldiers and Sailors Passed Buckets.

The Steam Pumps Failed to Work and There Were No Hand Pumps on Board—Part of the Crew Deserted at Honolulu.

MANILA, Nov. 29.—When the Manauense anchored in Manila bay Tuesday morning, 33 days from San Francisco, there were several feet of water in her hold and 400 grimy, greasy, hungry, exhausted soldiers and sailors had been passing buckets of water since November 17 night and day. First Assistant Engineer Dunleavy was under arrest, and according to Col. Webb Hayes' official report the chief engineer would also have been under arrest if there had been anyone to replace him. The colonel's report also declares that the captain of the vessel told him that the only thing which brought them through was the fact that the men were greenhorns and failed to realize their danger, while experienced seamen would have deserted the ship and taken to the boats in mid ocean. The Manauense is a chartered ship flying the British flag. She belongs to a firm of which Senator Perkins, of San Francisco, is alleged to be a junior member. The officers say the firm bought her for $45,000, and they claim efforts were made to sell her to the government for $150,000.

She started from San Francisco, accompanied by the transport Pekin, which carried the remainder of the regiment, and encountered heavy seas to Honolulu without accident.

After starting it developed that she was unmanned and soldiers had to be detailed to let as firemen, coal passers and waiters and to do other work. Before reaching Honolulu, the crew concluded that the ship was not safe and the majority agreed to desert. Though they were closely watched many of the crew succeeded in getting away and the Manauense left Honolulu with less than half her crew. The captain of the transport November 17, told Col. Hayes that the vessel had sprung a leak and an investigation resulted in finding several feet of water in her hold. The steam pumps were tried but failed to work, and there were no hand pumps on board. However, 46 buckets were found, others were improvised, and the soldiers not employed in working the ship were organized into five shifts and stripped and forming lines they began bailing. The officers working with the men passing the buckets, which were sent up to the deck by a windlass. The longest time a shift could stand was two hours, and often the period was not longer than half an hour. The bailing continued until the ship anchored here.

The water rose rapidly and the bailing force was doubled. But the buckets were gradually smashed and barrels and boxes were substituted for them. The men working in darkness, planks and pieces of iron shafting being violently washed among them. The firemen could only feed the fires by being lifted on the shoulders of the other men through water waist deep.

The typhoon lasted two days and a half, and in the midst of it the engines stopped. The officers then held a council and found that there were 420 persons on board, with life boat accommodations for 213.

In the meantime the men below, ignorant of their extreme peril, were passing buckets and singing "What the H— Do We Care," while the ship rolled helplessly on the ocean, with hatches closed.

The heat was intense until the typhoon passed and then the Pekin, which had retraced her course about 70 miles, came alongside the Manauense which was rolling so heavily that the soldiers in the hold could at each roll see the Pekin through the hatches overhead.

Col. James S. Pettit, commander of the 31st volunteer regiment ordered the Manauense to proceed to Guam and await relief but the captain of the Manauense demurred, the officers say, because the government was renting the ship for $500 per day.

Throughout the remainder of the voyage the engines of the Manauense failed frequently and the ship would roll for a few hours while the engines were repairing. Then the steamer would proceed again for a few hours. The meat and vegetables rotted because of the failure of the refrigerators and were thrown overboard.

After the storm the water supplied to the ship at Honolulu had to be used for the boilers, and there was little or none for drinking. In fact, it is asserted that during the last week of the voyage the men lived almost entirely on whisky, beer and hard tack.

The regiment will proceed to Zamboanga on the Pekin to garrison several ports on the island of Mindanao.

OZARK AGRICULTURE.

How Farmers Practice Rotation of Crops in That Prolific Region.

Ozark humor appreciates the story that a scientist was quite amazed the other day at observing a farmer, after killing a nest of snakes turned up by the plow, arrange the dead snakes in the furrow before he went back to the plow.

"Why do you do that, my good man?" the scientist asked.

The farmer looked curiously at the scientist, and, seeing that he was really in search of information, replied:

"I do that so the plow will cover the snakes on the next round."

Seeing that the scientist was still mystified, the farmer continued:

"I cover the snakes so that they will decompose. That is what you call it, isn't it?"

"Yes," said the scientist, with a rising inflection.

"Well," continued the farmer, "the decomposition of animal matter furnishes nourishment for the plant life, I believe?"

"Yes," again said the scientist.

"Then snakes will make corn grow, won't they?" triumphantly asked the farmer.

"Yes," said the scientist.

"And whisky will make more snakes, won't it, mister; that is what we call rotation in the agriculture of this region?"

Its Glory Gone.

In one of the finest cities of our west there lives a certain man who has been prominent all his life in the work of building and managing theaters. He has been too busy at this to have much time for reading. When his pile was made he started for Europe and visited the various countries. Among other cities he took in Rome. It chanced that he drove out in the country and was shown the Coliseum. The guide told him it was a theater. The old man was surprised. When he came back he was asked about his trip; he mentioned Rome. Naturally he was asked if he had seen the Coliseum. He had. He didn't think much of it. To quote his own words: "It was a damned good house once, but it's in ruins now."—Detroit Free Press.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 94,387]
"I am so grateful to you for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me that I feel as though I must tell about it. A year ago I was taken very sick. Doctors could do me no good only to deaden the pain which I had almost constantly. I got some of your Compound and took one bottle and received benefit from it at once. I have taken it ever since and now have no backache, no pain in my side and my stomach and bowels are perfectly well. I can honestly say that there is nothing like it. If I could only tell every woman how much good your medicine has done me, they would surely try it."—MARTHA M. KING, NORTH ATTLEBORO, MASS.

The way women trifle with health shows a degree of indifference that is past understanding. Happiness and usefulness depend on physical health; so does a good disposition. Disease makes women nervous, irritable and snappish. The very effort of ailing women to be good-natured makes them nervous. Write to Mrs. Pinkham, she will help you to health and happiness. It costs nothing to get Mrs. Pinkham's advice. Her address is Lynn, Mass.

Queer Election Wager.

James Tudor, Republican, and John Kelly, Democrat, have made a queer election wager over in Madison county. If Goebel is declared elected Kelly is to have the pleasure of baptizing Tudor in a pond near Cottonburg. If Taylor is declared the winner Kelly is to be soured under the same chilly waters by Tudor.

Will Rest in Texas.

Col. William J. Bryan has decided to spend the Winter in Texas and California seeking rest, of which he feels the need after the exhausting campaign he made in his own and other States prior to the late election. He has rented his Lincoln home and will be absent at least six months.

When They Go In.

The newly elected Governor of Kentucky will be inaugurated on the fifth Tuesday after his election, which this year will be on December 12th. The Lieutenant-Governor and other State officers will take charge of their offices on January 1st. The Governor is elected for a term of four years, and should he die before his term of office expires the Lieutenant-Governor is appointed to fill the vacancy and serves in that capacity until the next regular election. The members of the General Assembly—the Representatives and Senators—take possession of their offices on the first day of January following their election. The Representatives are elected for a term of two years, while the Senators serve four years.

Crocker Is For Bryan.

Richard Crocker, who sailed for Europe Tuesday, was interviewed Monday at the Democratic Club. He said: "I want to say, before my departure for Europe, that William J. Bryan will be the standard bearer of the Democratic party in the next National campaign. The fight will be against trusts and imperialism, and Mr. Bryan is the only man to lead such a fight. Tammany Hall will give him its heartiest support, you may rest assured of that. No runningmate for Mr. Bryan has been selected yet. Several names have been under consideration, but no decision has been arrived at."

NUPTIAL KNOTS

Engagements, Announcements And Solemnizations Of The Marriage Vows.

One of the most important society events of the season in Clark county was the marriage at 6:30 o'clock Wednesday evening at the residence of Judge Geo. B. Nelson, of Dwight L. Pendleton and Miss Sara Prewitt. The Rev. George H. Means, of Winchester, was the officiating clergyman. Kennedy Helm, of Louisville, was groomsmen; Miss Elizabeth Nelson, maid of honor; Misses Lillie Robinson, of Lexington; Ida Helm, Preston Bruce and Miss Macanley, of Louisville; Theo. Nelson, Carrie Lee Hathaway, Sarah Beckner, Mary Gay, Julia Graves and Katherine Tebbe, of Winchester, bridesmaids. Immediately after the ceremony the couple left for a trip to the South. The bridegroom is a young attorney of Winchester. He is a son of the late W. K. Pendleton, for a long time President of Bethany College. The bride belongs to one of the wealthiest and most prominent families of Central Kentucky.

Miss Annie Gorey, a most estimable young lady of this city, and Mr. Andrew Collins, of Florence, Ky., were the principals in a Thanksgiving wedding yesterday morning at the Catholic Church. The bride, who is a sister of Robert and Edward Gorey, of this city, wore a traveling suit of castor cloth. The groom is a professor in the West Covington public school, and is a worthy gentleman. The attendants were Mr. Edward Gorey and Miss Kate Burke, the latter wearing a blue cloth suit. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father James Gorey, of Covington, who is private secretary to Bishop Maes. Mr. Collins and bride left yesterday for Florence for a visit to relatives.

Wm. S. Kelly and Miss Sue Anderson, of Georgetown, were married at the home of the bride Wednesday night. The Rev. Z. T. Cody, of the Baptist church, performed the ceremony. The marriage was a great surprise to the friends of the young couple, having been kept a secret up to the time. They left at once on a bridal tour. The bridegroom is the son of Judge James H. Kelly and the bride the daughter of Col. H. S. Anderson, and a sister of Mrs. Robert Ferguson and Mrs. Earl Ferguson, of this city. The bride and groom have many friends in Paris to wish them happiness.

The State Election Commissioners will meet at Frankfort to-morrow to canvass the returns from the recent election.

Republican Convention.

The Bourbon County Republicans held a convention yesterday to name delegates to the District Convention which meets at noon to-day at Lexington to nominate a candidate for Congress from this District. A. W. Cottingham was chairman of the convention and T. C. Johnson was secretary. The delegates were uninstructed.

The State School of Reform, at Lexington, for the care of youthful criminals, was dedicated Tuesday. Fifty-six prisoners have been transferred from Frankfort and Eddyville to the new institution.

The voyage was a terrible one, the vessel being in a typhoon for two days. The men worked day and night in bailing out the ship. They had no provisions for two days. No casualties were reported.

EVENTIDE.

The daylight dies down the sky,
Bringing the hour of rest,
The weary wild birds slowly fly
To seek their sheltering nests.
Across the billowy sea of foam
The white-winged ships draw near,
To reach the haven north the haw
Ere the first stars appear.

It is the hour man loveth best
Of all earth's passing hours,
When vesper bells ring loud and clear
From many a wayside tower,
And falls the dew a blessing sweet
Where myriad blossoms grow,
While kindred tongues in joy repeat
The tales of long ago.

How soft and low the breezes blow
On every hill and lea,
Within the dell the birds note ring
From every wayside tree.
The crickets chirp their pleasing notes,
Where meadow grasses grow,
For careworn hearts to know,

But Bowers found it no easy task to retrace his steps. It was now very dark, and as Rider had not dared to light a fire there was nothing to guide his companion, who stumbled about as best he could, not daring to shout for fear he might alarm the party he had just been watching. He became hopelessly lost at last and was about to give up the search until daylight when he heard a horse stamping.

Confident there was no one but Rider near him, he called softly, and to his intense delight the sailor answered from a point not 20 yards away:

"Is that you, Bowers?"
"Yes," was the surly reply, as the big miner reached his side, "and I've had a nice time gittin' here, too. I'm starved."
"Shall I light a fire?" asked Rider.
"I've got it all ready, but I was skittish about lighting it till I found out what you had seen."

"You don't light no fire here," growled the other. "We've got ter put up with cold grub to-night. We've been regular done for, we have!"

"What's the matter?"
"Matter enuff! In the first place, that Tarbox chap we see start for Dyea has met a party an' turned back. One o' ther men is named Avery!"

"Avery!"
The mate's teeth chattered as he gasped:
"But I saw him buried at sea!"

"Rot! There may be more'n one Avery in ther world! Didn't that letter say somethin' 'bout a man named Bill that was to come? Course it did! Mebbe it's the old chap's brother or cousin or somethin'."

"Then there's two young chaps that looked like sailors an' a young gal that I take ter be Avery's darter by the way she stayed 'round him. They've routed out the chap as wrote the letter an' they've all gone into camp under a big cliff not more'n a mile from where we're sittin' this mornin'."

"The young men must be Scott and the second mate," said Rider, "and don't you see these papers are no good to us after all our trouble? We can't do anything now but give the thing up and make for the Klondike. We've got good ood!"

"Make for nothin'!" was the savage interruption. "Them men hev got a gold mine right 'round here somewheres and I've as much right there as they hev if I can only find it. I'd like ter see 'em drive me off. You can go to the Klondike if yer like, but yer don't take any o' this stuff with yer. See?"

Like most bullies, Obed Rider was easily cowed by a bigger bully than himself, and he dared not make the reply which came to his lips. Instead he said:

"But I can't join these men after taking these papers from Scott. There'd be trouble."

"I didn't say I was goin' to jine 'em. Look here, Rider, yer yer scared or not? Here we are, two stout chaps with plenty of grub an' the horses. We know jest whar them fellers are now, an' they don't know whar we be. If we keeps our eyes open thar's sure ter be a chance for business. Will yer stick ter me or not?"

Rider had little choice. He dared not demand half the outfit his own money had purchased, and was forced to submit, so with a show of sincerity he exclaimed:

"Of course I'll stick, Bowers!"
"All right. Now, you keep watch the first half of ther night an' call me for ther last. We've got ter be movin' bright an' early."

In five minutes the hardened rascal was snoring, while Rider stood guard. He had no stomach for Bowers' company now, and would gladly have left him, but the miner had gained such an ascendancy over him that he dared not attempt to leave him now that he was asleep. He had meant to assault Tom Scott and take his papers, but his curiosity was inflamed, and he had been drinking then. He was sober now, and the evident intention of his comrade to attempt to bully or rob five armed men was quite another matter. Still, there was no help for it, and he tried to steel his cowardly heart to its work.

Bowers relieved him at midnight, and as soon as the first streak of daylight could be seen he aroused the mate and said:

"I'm off again. Stay here and keep in under this hill as much as you can till I get back."

Once more he made his way to the boulder and took up his station. From his hiding place he could see the different members of the party as they carried load after load out of sight among the rocks, but suddenly one of the men mounted a horse and drove the rest directly toward the hidden watcher.

"What's he drivin' at?" muttered Bowers to himself.
As the rider drew near the miner was forced to throw himself at full length on the ground to escape being seen, and he fingered his revolver grimly. Tarbox was too busy with the horses to look very sharply at him, and soon turned back after giving the animals a few sharp blows, which sent them off at full speed.

Then he returned to his party, and at last they had all disappeared from sight.

Bowers waited until he was satisfied that they would not reappear; then he stretched his cramped limbs and hurried back to Rider, who was impatiently awaiting him.

"What are they doing?" asked the latter, eagerly.
"They've turned all their critters loose an' hid away somewheres," was the reply. "See here, Rider, I've got a scheme."

"A scheme?"
"That's what I said. It's a good one, too. Suppose you could find yer way back to Dyea?"

"Of course I could. Why?"
"I'm goin' ter tell yer why. Thar's about a dozen good critters turned loose. They're worth $200 apiece in Dyea, I dunno but more. You don't seem ter want ter put up a bluff an' jine this party. We'll ketch them horses an' you drive 'em back to Dyea an' sell 'em. Bring one spare critter back with yer fer me an' one fer ther swag. When yer git back come ter the big boulder an' jest as ther sun is risin' show yerself a minit. That night hev the horses thar an' I'll jine yer. Understan'?"

"But what are you goin' to do?"
"That's my funeral. You do jest as I tell yer. Don't make any slip. It wouldn't be very healthy fer yer if yer went back on me. I'd foller yer all over kingdom come."

Rider jumped at the proposal. Whether he would return or not was a question he could settle later on. At present it was enough to be rid of the desperate man who eyed him as if reading his very thoughts.

"You'll come back. I shall have good enough to make us both rich or else I shan't be 'bove ground. I'm takin' all the risk an' ef yer don't come back I shall prob'ly miss yer. I'll do my part an' you see yo' do yours."

It was evident that he was about to engage in some desperate scheme, and Rider hastened to assure him that he would be back as fast as possible.

"You'll travel light an' you order be back in 12 days," said Bowers. "I shall look fer yer 'bout that time. So long."

Rider started off on the back trail at once, and while he was making his way to Dyea we must follow Hank Bowers as he rides around the boulder and approaches the spot where Tom Scott and his party had camped the night before.

He had no means of telling whether his approach was observed or not, but he rode boldly forward and soon reached the deserted camp. Here he dismounted and walked toward the cliff between the scattered rocks in the same direction he had seen the outfit carried.

"I'll swear this is the way they went," he said aloud as he paused before the face of the cliff and looked keenly about him. "They hain't got wings an' they must be here somewheres or they'd never drove off them horses. They're in some place horses couldn't be took, but whar is it? Tain't up ther valley, 'cause I seen 'em come in here with my own eyes."

For some time he paced about the spot, examining each boulder to see that there was no hiding place near it, but he could discover nothing and began to grow angry.

"Wouldn't it be slick if that cuss should sell the hosses an' skip out an' I shouldn't find these—Hello! What's that!"

His restless eyes at last noticed the mass of vines which covered the opening in the cliff, and with a wrench he tore it aside.

"I've got it now," he cried, as he entered without hesitation and made his way along the rocky passage. "What luck! No wonder they let the critters go! This beats all I ever saw!"

Ahead of him was a sharp turn, and just before he reached it there was a crash like thunder, and an instant later the way was blocked by a massive rock which would have crushed him had he been a few feet further ahead.

In spite of his wonderful nerve Bowers was so startled that he uttered a shout of dismay, which reached the ears of the men above.

CHAPTER XII.

DIGGING A FORTUNE.

Hank Bowers did not for a moment imagine that the big boulder had fallen by accident. On the contrary he realized it had been purposely rolled there to prevent his ingress. It followed, then, that he had been seen approaching the cliff.

"There must be some sort of a valley behind this 'ere cliff," he concluded, as he stood measuring the distance to the top of the obstructing stone with his eye, "an' that feller won't keep me out of it long."

With a confident air he retraced his steps to the opening and removed the packs from his horses. Then he took a coil of rope on his arm and entered the cleft once more.

Bowers had been a cowboy once and was an expert with the lasso. He had noticed a sharp spur on the side of the barrier, and with a deft hand he looped his rope around it and attempted. Then with an agility remarkable in so large a man he drew himself up about 20 feet, until he was able to secure a foothold and clamber over the top.

To his surprise he saw no one, and without the least sign of fear he climbed up the short distance remaining to be traversed and appeared before the astonished eyes of the little group, who were even then discussing the noise they had heard a few moments before.

"Hello, pard," he said, boldly approaching our friends. "Yer don't seem over'n' above glad ter see me, but I'm here. Now, what's ter be done? I ain't a very revengeful sort o' a cuss or I'd ask yer what yer meant by tryin' ter squash me with a couple o' ton o' rock jest now."

His impudence kept the others quiet for a moment, and then Tarbox stepped forward and said, sternly:
"You are not wanted here. You were kicked out of Ladue's for stealing, and your present partner is a thief and would-be murderer. Where's he?"

"I've parted company with the low-down skunk," was the ready reply, as Bowers threw into his voice an excellent assumption of indignation. "He owned up this mornin' that he'd stole them papers and dassent show his head here fer fear the dam what owned 'em might hev passed us while we was off the trail. I told him ter git out an' leave my company, and he's gone back ter Dyea. That's straight!"

His manner was so earnest that he made an impression and was quick to notice it. Before anyone had time to reply he went on:

"It's true I was kicked out o' Joe Ladue's, but I was drunk an' took some dust from a chap what was drunker'n I was. I had the craze fer lickin' on me an' didn't more'n half know what I was doin'."

"Besides that," he continued, seeing that he was gaining ground, "I've got a good outfit down below here an' I don't ask no grub. I know you've struck it rich here an' here's the papers ter prove it. I took 'em from that Rider afore he started off. All I want is ter stay here an' make my pile. This is free ground anyway, an' yer can't drive me off if I want ter stay. Even if yer did clean me out I could bring hundreds o' miners here in no time by telling what I know. What is it, pards, stay or light out for Dyea and fetch the crowd?"

As he paused for a reply the others looked blankly at each other. He had spoken the truth. He had a perfect right to stay. They could not murder him, and to drive him away would be to give the news of their mine to the world.

Both Tarbox and Taylor realized that they had but one course to pursue. The pay streak was so crooked and shallow that it would be necessary to go over a large piece of ground to follow it, and should their discovery leak out they would be confined to a claim apiece, where they now could pick and choose over the entire valley.

Bowers watched them with an easy air as they spoke in low tones for a moment, for he knew well they could but decide one way. Presently Dick Taylor said, bluntly:

"What you say is true in regard to this place. We don't want you, but we are obliged to have you. Get your stuff up out of sight. We will help you do that for our own sake. After that you will keep away from our camp and dig all you please."

An hour later his outfit was in the valley, and as he busied himself putting up his tent he wore a self-satisfied expression that boded ill for the peace of the men upon whom he had forced himself so cleverly.

But if Hank Bowers could have been present at a little conference that night he would not have congratulated himself so suddenly. He was a deep rascal, but he had different material to deal with than the sailor in whose company he had recently been.

Dick Taylor was a very shrewd sort of a person, and while he had been forced to receive the stranger into his camp he was determined he should not remain there after they were ready to have him go. To get rid of him in a way that would keep his tongue sealed in regard to the gold they had found was the problem and he had thought of a way which he hoped might answer their purpose.

That night he detailed his scheme to the others, and all agreed that it was the wisest course under the circumstances. What it was will develop later.

"I don't believe a word about his breaking with that Rider," he added, when the whole ground had been gone over. "There's no doubt in my mind that they've put up some job between them. There's five of us, anyhow, and while he's in camp we must keep an eye open nights. We'll divide the time up, and it won't come hard. We will stay in this tent, of course, and we won't let him know but what we're all asleep. He won't do anything until we have a bigger pile than we've got now."

Their plans being arranged, the little party separated for the night, but Avery shared the cave with his daughter, as he thought it safer. This was also the repository of some $10,000 worth of gold, which the two men had already taken from the spot.

On the following morning work was commenced in earnest, and the piles of dirt began to melt away before the vigorous attacks of the men, while Hank Bowers dug manfully by himself a short distance away, apparently satisfied to take them at their word. He was an experienced miner, and his little pile of dust grew steadily.

That night the result of their combined efforts was nearly $1,000, and Tom Scott could hardly be content to take the necessary time for sleep. It seemed to him that his fortune was already made.

Three days of unremitting toil followed, the average being a little less than the first day. Then Avery said, as they were starting out the fourth morning:

"Taylor, we are digging in the wrong place altogether."

"The wrong place?"

"Yes, that's what I said. I've waited to see how rich this dirt is and I am not satisfied. Don't you see, Dick, you have been digging here by a stream that runs out, but it isn't the stream that cut that big hole through the face of the cliff. That goes off in another direction altogether, you see."

"Perhaps a hundred or a thousand years ago this stream wasn't running at all. Now, where must the bed of the stream have been that did cut its way through that rock? You can see it must have been over there on the other side of the ridge. I'll bet that old stream ran thousands of years before it dried up. It must have."

"How do you know?" asked Tom, in wonder.

"Because it would take that long to wear through the rock as it did. It was a bigger stream than this by a good deal. See those big stones scattered all around in its bed. It must have been a powerful stream to start them, and there they are everywhere."

"By thunder, I believe you're right!" cried Taylor, excitedly. "I can see it now. I ought to have known it at first, but we struck good paying dirt on this side, and didn't prospect any further. Come on, let's try over there!"

"Hold on a bit," replied Avery. "You're not headed for the best place." The others looked at him to see if he was joking, but his face was very earnest, and he went on:

"It makes lots of difference where we dig. We may be surprised here any day and can't hope to keep this place to ourselves a great while. We don't want to waste a day. Just look at that bend where the round pebbles are collected. There was a strong eddy just there. Under the ridge of such a place is apt to be more gold than anywhere else. Let's try there first, and if we don't find gold I'm no prophet."

His words carried conviction, and the party seized their shovels and hurried to the spot at once. They found it covered with shingle, the debris of centuries. Below was a little dirt, and then they struck a layer of gravel.

Tom Scott was working with all his might. He had taken about a foot of gravel from the place about a yard square, when, as he drove his shovel down, it struck something which felt like a rock. A moment later he had laid bare a few inches of rough, shaly surface, just as the others also struck the same obstruction.

"I guess I've struck bottom," he said ruefully. "We can't dig here."

As he spoke he scraped the surface of the rock under his feet carelessly with his shovel.

Something yellow caught his eye, and with a little exclamation of surprise, he dropped on his knees and brushed away the dirt about it.

Unsympathetic.

The author of "Twenty-five Years in British Guiana" says that he was once camping out with companions there, and that some of them had not his acquaintance with the woods. At last we turned into our hammocks, and I was dropping off to sleep, when I was roused by the most infernal barking and roaring. Attracted by our fire and singing, a troop of howling baboons had come over the trees, and were making night hideous by their yells.

Shields, who was not acquainted with the brutes, shook my hammock violently, and whispered: "What on earth is that?" Not knowing very well what I was saying, I replied: "Tigers." "Are they very near?" "Very," said I, and taking advantage of a lull in the chorus, I dropped asleep. Poor Shields lay awake half the night, expecting to be devoured by wild beasts. He was sleepy and cross in the morning, and Bridges asked him if he had heard the baboons. "Oh, those were baboons, were they? What an awful noise they make! But what were they saying?" "I don't know," said Bridges, unsympathetically. "I don't belong to the same species."—Detroit Free Press.

Nelson as a Boy.

"I wonder, child," said Nelson's grandmother, with whom he lived, "that hunger and fear did not drive you home." "Fear?" replied the youngster. "I never saw fear. What is it?" Nelson was still at school when he was summoned to join his ship. The parting with his elder brother, William, was the first of those privations which every sailor must suffer. But if the good-by at school was painful, how much more so must have been the farewell with his grandmother! As she beheld him, dressed in the smart midshipman's uniform, did she realize that the lad before her would, contrary to all expectations, take to his profession with enjoyment and, within about a year, shake off a fit of depression by saying: "I will be a hero, and brave every danger!" Did she see in the upright figure the future viscount whose doughty deeds, unparalleled in history, were to call forth blessings from men and women of every class as he set out on his last, fatal voyage against the French? Did she feel that one day a nation would weep for the loss of one of its noblest sons, whose dying words should be: "Thank God, I have done my duty."—Cassell's Little Folks.

He Had Reason to Run.

The man came out of an office building on the run and started down the street.

"Here! Here!" cried the policeman on the corner. "What's your hurry?" "There's a man back there trying to sell me a book on 25 weekly installments of $2.33 each!" cried the victim. The policeman instantly released his hold.

"Run!" he cried. "Run like a white-head! Maybe you can get away from him yet."—Chicago Post.

Doctors Can't Cure It!

Contagious blood poison is absolutely beyond the skill of the doctors. They may dose a patient for years on their mercurial and potash remedies, but he will never be rid of the disease; on the other hand, his condition will grow steadily worse. S. S. S. is the only cure for this terrible affliction, because it is the only remedy which goes direct to the cause of the disease and forces it from the system.

I was afflicted with Blood Poison, and the best doctors did me no good, though I took their treatment faithfully. In fact, I seemed to get worse all the while. I took almost every so-called blood remedy, but they did not seem to reach the disease, and had no effect whatever. I was disheartened, for it seemed that I would never be cured. At the advice of a friend I then took S. S. S., and began to improve. I continued the medicine, and it cured me completely, building up my health and increasing my appetite. Although this was ten years ago, I have never yet had a sign of the disease to return.
W. R. NEWMAN, Staunton, Va.

It is like self-destruction to continue to take potash and mercury; besides totally destroying the digestion, they dry up the marrow in the bones, producing a stiffness and swelling of the joints, causing the hair to fall out, and completely wrecking the system.

S.S.S. For Blood

is guaranteed Purely Vegetable, and is the only blood remedy free from these dangerous minerals.
Book on self-treatment sent free by Swift Specific Company, Atlanta, Ga.

August Flower.

"It is a surprising fact," says Prof. Honton, "that in my travels in all parts of the world, for the last ten years, I have met more people having used Green's August Flower than any other remedy, for dyspepsia, deranged liver and stomach, and for constipation. I find for tourists and salesmen, or for persons filling office positions where headaches and general bad feelings from irregular habits exist, that Green's August Flower is a grand remedy.
